finding hope in grief

Virtual grief support for young adults

Healing through connection

Connection, loss, and finding steady ground

Finishing school. Looking for work.
Figuring out what's next. Then someone you love dies. Suddenly, everything else feels unimportant or impossible.

Sometimes people say, "You'll move on."
But grief doesn't work like that.

Join Journey to Hope, a free virtual group for young adults navigating loss. It's a space to be honest and connect with others who understand. You'll gather tools to live with grief and loss, without minimizing them.

What to expect

- Eight weekly online sessions
- Trained group leaders
- Confidential and supportive environment
- Peer connection and guided discussion

After you finish the initial program, Journey to Hope hosts monthly virtual meet-ups and annual in-person retreats.

“ Our group gave me a chance to get away from everyday life and allow myself to actually grieve. I learned it's okay to be sad and miss my uncle. I now look at my loss in a new perspective. This group was what I needed. ”

— Edwina, 21 years old

Why sharing helps

Grief doesn't disappear, but it does change shape over time. You can remember the person you lost while building your future. Being with people who understand your situation can help as you adjust to your new normal.

How to join

Participation is free. Reach out and we'll guide you through our simple intake process to get started.
